A Guide to Dormant Accounts

Dormant Accounts Notice

- Under the terms of the Dormant Accounts Act, 2001, financial institutions are required to identify all accounts where there has been no customer transaction for the past 15 years and designate them as dormant accounts.
- Institutions are required to make reasonable effort to contact the account holders of accounts designated as dormant with a view to ascertaining the wishes of the customer and having the account reactivated via a transaction (debit and/or credit) originated by the customer.
- Once a transaction has taken place the account will be removed from the dormant list and the 'clock' for dormancy purposes will be reset to zero.
- Where it transpires that the customer is deceased the legal/personal representative may reactivate the account in the normal manner.
- Where the account holder does not initiate a transaction by 31st March next, the funds in the account will be transferred to the National Treasury Management Agency (NTMA) which will manage the funds on behalf of the State.

- Funds that are transferred in this manner remain the property of the account holder and may be reclaimed at any time from the original account holding branch, or Head Office as appropriate, by following the procedures outlined in the booklet A Guide to Dormant Accounts available at all institutions.
- Institutions are required to write to all customers identified as holders of dormant accounts except where (a) the balance of the account is below €100, (b) the institution has been instructed by the customer to hold all correspondence, or (c) previous correspondence to the last known address has been returned marked 'gone away'.
- If you believe you have an account that may be classified as dormant, please contact your branch, or financial institution Head Office as appropriate, so as to enable your account to be reactivated and removed from the dormant list.
- If the branch or institution that held your account no longer exists, you can visit the Banking & Payments Federation Ireland website at www.bpfi.ie for information on changes to its member banks and building societies over time and their contact details.
- Individuals who make fraudulent claims may be guilty of an offence under the terms of the Act.

When is an Account Dormant?

Under the terms of the Dormant Accounts Act, 2001, all accounts where there has not been a customer transaction for 15 years or more must be designated as dormant. Affected customers will be advised either directly or through general advertisements in the national press. The funds in accounts designated as dormant will, unless the account is reactivated by a debit and/or credit transaction within the specified timeframe, be transferred to the National Treasury Management Agency (NTMA) which will manage the funds on behalf of the State. A financial institution may regard an account as being dormant, prior to the expiration of the 15-year period mentioned above, for a number of reasons, for example,

- a set period of time may have passed without any voluntary transactions, such as withdrawals or deposits on the account;
- statements may have been returned and marked 'gone away', etc.

Effectively the financial institution has lost touch with the customer and therefore will treat the account as dormant rather than 'live'. In the interest of fraud prevention and privacy, the financial institution may cease to send cheque cards, chequebooks and confidential information like statements on such accounts to addresses that are possibly out of date.

Even where an account is designated as being dormant, either by the financial institution or under the terms of the Act, the following factors still apply:

- The funds remain the property of the customer and will be repaid on receipt and verification of a valid claim.
- Interest continues to accrue on those funds, depending on the type of account.

Dormant accounts may be reactivated either by the customer or the legal/personal representative(s) of the customer.

How to Claim Funds in a Dormant Account

1. If you have been notified by your financial institution or if you have reason to believe that you have dormant funds in a branch of a financial institution, you should approach the financial institution concerned and complete the Dormant Account Claim Form. You may be asked to provide identification.
2. If you have reason to believe that you have a legal claim on dormant funds in another person's name, you should approach the branch or Head Office concerned and complete the Dormant Account Claim Form. In these circumstances, you will have to provide evidence of your legitimate interest.
3. All claims will be thoroughly investigated. On receipt of a completed Dormant Account Claim Form, the financial institution will provide an acknowledgement, and, if necessary, contact you for further information. You will be notified of the outcome of your claim as quickly as possible. Where the funds have been transferred to the NTMA under the terms of the Dormant Accounts Act, 2001, a financial institution has 28 days to validate a claim and submit a claim for repayment to NTMA.

The NTMA has 21 days to respond and the financial institution has a further seven days to refund the customer. Therefore, it may take up to 56 days in total to process a claim from a customer. If appropriate, interest will continue to accrue up to the date of repayment.

4. If the financial institution agrees that your claim is valid, it will notify you of the following: (a) the balance of the account and any accrued interest if the account is interest-bearing; and (b) how to access the funds.

5. If, following investigation, the financial institution is unable to validate your claim, a representative will notify you of the reasons. If you are not satisfied with the explanation provided, you may progress your claim through the financial institution's internal complaints process. If you are not satisfied with the outcome, you may raise the matter with the Financial Services and Pensions Ombudsman.

How to Trace Funds

The original account holding branch may have changed address, been amalgamated with another branch nearby or closed down. The Head Office of each financial institution will be able to advise in respect of its own branch network.

The original account holding financial institution may have changed address, changed its name, been taken over, been amalgamated with another financial institution or closed down. Banking & Payments Federation Ireland maintains a register of such changes and this may be accessed via the BPFI website at www.bpfi.ie

In certain instances, the next-of-kin may not be aware of the branch or indeed the financial institution holding accounts in the names of deceased or incapacitated persons. Each financial institution provides an effective tracing service for bona fide claims from solicitors and/or legal/personal representatives seeking to establish the existence of such accounts, within its branch network. A financial institution may negotiate a charge in respect of this service before undertaking a search of its records. Your branch will advise you on how to access this service.
